Shortly after the World War an Inter-Allied Commission delimitated the Turkish-Bulgarian frontier, at which time marking posts were put in places decided by the Commission. Since then the marking posts have been moved back and forth by peasants of both countries to suit their needs for farming. As the Inter-Allied Commission had no Bulgarian or Turkish member, the delimitation of the frontier was naturally not satisfactory to either country. Last June a Turkish-Bulgarian Military Commission was appointed to definitely fix the frontier limits. This Commission has just completed its work and its members have returned to their respective capitals. The Commission was composed of one Bulgarian and one Turkish Colonel, one Bulgarian and one Turkish General Staff Captain, one Bulgarian and one Turkish Naval Officer, one Bulgarian and one Turkish Military Topographer, and one civilian interpreter.
